Dr. Liat Huller Harari is a psychiatrist, photographer and mother, not necessarily always by this order. She works and lives in Givatayim, Israel.

Liat attended the Sackler Faculty of Medicine, Tel Aviv, and completed her psychiatric residency at Sheba Medical Center. She works as a senior psychiatrist at Ramat Chen Community Mental Health Center, where she founded the unit of women's psychiatry, specializing in the field of perinatal psychiatry.

As long as she can remember, Liat has engaged in all sorts of crafts and visual arts. As a child she watched her father taking photographs and developing his negatives in the darkroom. She received her first 35mm film camera at the age of 6 years and has been taking photographs ever since. She is mainly self-taught, refining her photography abilities with courses and workshops over the years.

For the last decade, her passion has been nature photography. Describing her passion, she says, “I love big epic landscapes, but also the little things of nature. The ability to make the mundane epic is a gift.”

As a photographer and a psychiatrist, she feels that nature resonates with the depth of our souls, touching our private and collective subconscious. Liat conveys this resonance to the viewer in a cohesive engaging image.

The photograph Blue Velvet was taken using a Fuji XT1 camera, f/7, 1/125 sec, ISO 500.

You can see more of Liat’s work on her website, especially the series of sunrises from the Hula Valley and the Ramon Crater. “There is always something very special about sunrise,” she says. “This special quality derives not only from the unique light and colors of sunrise, but from a distinct primal, divine experience, rising in our soul watching the first rays of light reviving the tremendous void of night.”
