

Demolition

Yoad M. Dvir

Photo of demolition of Sde Dov Airport

Yoad M. Dvir is a hobbyist photographer with an interest in climate conditions and urbanization.

He was born in 1982, in Israel and grew up in the metropolitan urban center of the country. He currently works as a fulltime cyber security specialist and is a public speaker, who focuses on emerging trends in technology.

His photographs capture moments that seem frozen in time, both remarkable and special from a historical point of view so that in the future viewer can reflect and relive these special times.

Yoad is a true fan of history and geography. In Demolition, he illustrates a situation that is being transformed on a daily basis—the ever changing landscape. A strong winter storm is approaching Sde Dov Airport in Tel Aviv, a historical landscape is being transformed, and new developments are being formed.

Still towering high in the horizon, the old control-tower, scattered trees, and the everlasting Reading chimney are visible to the viewer. These icons will soon make way for new Tel Aviv city developments. He monitors the development of this once bustling airfield on a daily basis from his home.

This specific photo was taken using a unique mode with a Samsung mobile phone camera.

[yoad22@gmail.com]